Kos Island Greece, The Official Travel Guide.
Kos is located in the south-eastern Aegean Sea south of Kalymnos and north of Nisyros at the ancient Keramikos gulf (Kerme Körfezi) or Kos gulf, just 3 nautical miles from Asia Minor coast. It is the third largest island in the Dodecanese, its extent 290,29 kilometers and its circumference is around 60 nautical miles. From the prehistoric times it was an important channel of the sea ways that started from the Black Sea and along the shoreline of Asia Minor and the islands of Aegean and reached North Africa. Kos is the birthplace of the father of medicine, Hippocrates, which was born on the island around 460 B.C. and founded the Great School of Medicine of Kos. The island is famous for its rich vegetation and its temperate climate and it was characterized by the Roman doctor Gallino as "the most temperate place in the world". Kos Island Air ViewThe morphology of the ground varies and is the result of long-lasting geological changes particularly owed to the volcanic activity of the commonly known Aegean Arc (Nisyros, Thira, Milos, Methana). According to the latest geological studies seven volcanoes are located between Nisyros and Kos and one of them in the Isthmus of Kefalos is inactive today. The big explosion happened 160,000 years ago between Nisyros and Kefalos. As a result it covered half of the island of Kos, in the western part, Pyli is located 15 kilometers south-west of Kos town and about 4 kilometers south of Marmari, and has 2,500 permanent residents. In the past its name was "Peli" and it is built in the centre of the island in verdurous lowland with big olive trees and lots of green. The beautiful traditionally built stone houses, counting a few hundreds, surround the central square along with the traditional coffeehouses and the small taverns complete Pyli's daily life.

Marmari is 15 kilometers west of Kos Island town (at the northern coast of the island) and 4 kilometers north of the village Pyli. Its long and sandy beach is very popular and attracts many visitors due to its short distance from Kos town, its beautiful environment and the fact that it is well organized with umbrellas, sun beds and water sports facilities. Of course a lot of swimming, sunbathing and sand games also take place.

with a layer of ash and kisiris thickness of about 30 meters. Kos's ground fertility is a result of its volcanic origin, which had been known since antiquity and has left the proverbial phrase "whom Kos can't nourish Egypt can't either". In kosinfo.gr you will find useful information about our island Kos. Starting from the villages of Kos, Asfendiou, Wmaniou, Antimachia, Kardamena, Kefalos, Marmari, Mastihari, Pyli and Tingaki, then on how to get there, where to stay, what to see, where to eat and all that you need to make your stay the best ever, with a large photo gallery so that you can get a glimpse of our island's beauties. Kos Island Villages Tigaki is located 11 kilometers far from Kos town and 7 kilometers north of Asfendiou village. Tigaki's permanent residents reach around 250. It is a holiday resort which has undertaken a lot of development during the past decades especially along its long sandy coastline on the northern part of the island. The natural environment in Tigaki is impressive and calming, with lots of green all around and many plants and colourful flowers that decorate the landscape. The various accommodation alternatives close to the beach and in the surrounding area, along with a very peaceful, traffic-free environment made Tigaki one of the most popular destinations on the Kos island.

Asfendiou is situated 14 kilometers south west of Kos Town at the mountainside of Mountain Dikeo. There are around 100 permanent residents and according to history the old village flourished between 1850 and 1940. Asfendiou thanks to viticulture and olive-crop has a very interesting architecture with two different "neighbourhoods", Evangelistria or Pera Gitiona and Asomatos.

Mastihari is located 22 kilometers west from Kos town. Its small port links Kos to Kalymnos which is exactly on the opposite side and its beach is now a modern tourist resort. One of its main characteristic features includes the ruins of the old, Early Christian Basilica with its beautiful mosaic floor only a short distance from sea. There are several accommodation alternatives around the area.

The lovely village of Antimachia lies 23 kilometers south west of Kos town and 4 kilometers south of Mastihari. Its traditional character is completed by its position built on the mid part of a plateau. Antimachia is an ancient settlement and its name has not changed for over three thousand years. Here you can see a lot of beautiful and interesting sights the most important of which is the «House of Antimachia», a good representation of the traditional house of the early 20th century. Exactly opposite to the house you will find the "Milos tou Papa" (the priest's mill) an old traditional windmill. 4 kilometres North-eastern from the village, via a good dirt road, you can visit the ruins of the Medieval Castle (14th century) of the order of the Knights of St. John.

1885: The first goldsmith's workshop was opened in Kos Island by Theodosios Diakogiannis (1852-1928). Ever since, through four generations, Diakogiannis goldsmiths have carried on the tradition of tasteful, high quality, hand made jewelry in keeping with the principles laid down by their founder. The last few years the range of inspired Greek jewel designers, such as Dolly Boukoyiannis, Katerina Ioannidis, Margarita Meitani and others, have joined Diakogiannis family.
